

Circular Economy as key element of the European Green Deal

Moving from a linear to a circular mode of production and consumption is a key challenge identified by previous Commissions and incorporated as a core element of the European Green Deal. Policy makers have to ensure that businesses, above all SMEs, can reap the potential benefits by providing the adequate legislative framework. The European Chambers of Commerce and Industry are active in two ways: advocacy in the interest of their members and project work together with their members. In light of the upcoming publication of the new Circular Economy Action Plan, as announced in the Green Deal Communication, during this event both elements will be discussed with representatives from business, politics and civil society.
